

FASPE Ethics Leadership Training Offerings

FASPE partners with various organizations (corporations, professional services firms, government institutions, and more) to provide meaningful collective learning experiences for various levels of seniority, functional areas, affinity groups and/or office locations. For any legal staff participating, programs are eligible for CLE ethics credits in the United States. FASPE tailors its training to particular industries, particular participants and the specific goals and interests of the organization. All sessions are designed to generate interactive discussions and can be conducted in person or online with participants in distributed locations. FASPE's programs are led by distinguished faculty composed of university professors and practicing professionals, along with leading ethicists and historians who have specific expertise in the role of the professions in Germany and Nazi-occupied Europe from 1933 to 1945.

The heart of the FASPE training session is a case study approach that puts the participants in the minds of professionals facing difficult decisions. We can customize the design of the workshop to a time frame anywhere from 60 to 90 minutes to a full day. We can also create series of short workshops to occur regularly over a period of time or in-depth multi-day events.

The Introductory Workshop is our most common introduction to FASPE training for groups generally of 20 to as many as 100 participants. FASPE faculty present an overview of Nazi ethics paradigms and how they were applied; we then follow with case studies that, through the use of the history, invite discussion on issues such as motivation and ambition, ethics, leadership and personal responsibility. Our cases transition to current issues where the same themes apply. The format is highly interactive with the potential for short small-group discussions to deepen participants' connection to the material (this applies for remote sessions as well). The content can be customized to particular audiences; the workshop ranges in length from 90-120 minutes.
