	Session 3 and Lunch: Setting Our North Star(s) - Tawanna Dillahunt, Mary Gray This session will open with a quick reintroduction and something new that you'd like to add to the "Selfie Bingo" game (e.g., a fun fact about you that you discovered connects to other Fellows). We will also complete 2 short essay questions (Fellows will be asked to return to these questions again on the final day of the trip). We will then review our Community Charter, to see if we want		Prepare a written reflection on the following: 1) one thing that you hope to get out of this program, personally; 2) one 'burning question' about an ethical challenge or dilemma that you are facing in your professional life; and 3) how might the FASPE program's Law and Business Fellows help D&T Fellows address this ethical challenge? We will also return to the key takeaways that you posted to Canvas addressing the 3 pre-assigned materials to set up our discussion of the value of Professional Codes of Ethics. 12:45 – 2:15pm	Session 4: Weaponizing Big Data: Punchcards and the Holocaust - Tawanna Dillahunt, Mary Gray  This session introduces Fellows to the role that the computing industry played in designing systems for Nazi Germany. We will return to this case—IBM's punch cards—throughout the program to discuss: 1) technological innovation's relationship to building for social problems; 2) the need for data generated by and about people to 'scale' technologies and 3) how frameworks of "neutrality" and 'dual use' further complicate the role of professional ethics in design and technology. 2:30 – 4:00pm	Session 5: The Value and Challenges of Codifying Professional Ethics - Tawanna Dillahunt, Mary Gray  Fellows will read disclosure policies and other attempts to set norms and social expectations of technology's proper 'use' and discuss: do similar policies exist in other professions? What disclaimers should exist alongside tech? Are there other responsibilities that technologists should take on to identify and mitigate the risks and benefits of the systems that they help create? Prepare for the following: Fellows will be asked to reflect on the code of ethics or conduct from a professional association that they posted to Canvas before arriving. Does their example offer language or a tool for guiding ethical decision-making in design and tech? How does your sample Code align (or not) with the National Academies' study of responsible computing research? 10:00 – 11:15am	Session 11: 'Othering' as a Power Move – Tawanna Dillahunt, Mary Gray  This session will examine how technological processes of abstraction, categorization, and classification, as well as incentives to 'scale' technology and design are integral to the Profession. How might today's approaches to technological innovation reinforce existing inequities? What are ways we might be able to challenge the distance between 'end-users' and the tech	Location: ToT Seminar Room	Read: Zevallos, Z. (2011, October 14). What is Otherness? 2:00-3:00pm 3:00-3:30pm	Session 12: Shifting from "Users" to "Communities" as an Ethical Practice - Tawanna Dillahunt, Mary Gray  This session will delve deeper into the topic of "othering" and put it in conversation with calls for "design justice" and "community-driven innovation." We will focus on case studies of successful (or not-so-successful) community design projects that students bring to the session. 12:30-1:45pm	Session 13: Reimagine, Remake, Refuse: Creating Professional Tech Ethics from the Ground Up - Tawanna Dillahunt, Mary Gray  Drawing on our practice (in the first interdisciplinary session) using a case study approach and our discussions about community engagement to examine professional ethics, we will use this session to discuss in small groups: How could we 'reverse engineer' ubiquitous surveillance? At what stages might technologists have been able to intervene? What are the fundamental technological and social components that would have needed to be addressed to create a different future (including its demise?) for facial recognition technologies? How could other professions support your remedies to the 'Othering' effects wrought by tech in this case study?	Location: Historical Museum of Kraków (Rynek Główny 35 (Krzysztofory Palace))	Prepare to answer the questions in the Session Description in small groups. We will come back together to workshop an alternative reality for ubiquitous surveillance and its relationship to different stakeholders invested in knowing more about specific communities. 	Session 21: Letter to Your Future Professional Self - Tawanna Dillahunt, Mary Gray  We will spend this session reflecting on the readings below. Browse all three and select one to inspire a letter, poem, or some other form of expression to your future self. What concerns about the profession do you want to flag for your Future Self? Do you think your peers share your concerns? Why or why not? What are ways that you could respond as an individual and how might those responses change, if you have peers who share your concerns? What if they don't share your concerns? Finally, what is one piece advice that you have for Future You about how to personally and professionally manage these	Location: Collegium	Read: Wang, Jasmine. Small, interdisciplinary teams will work together for the first 45 minutes—each group taking a case—to create new systems and processes of ethical action that could challenge, replace, and/or be applied to existing business, legal, and technological approaches. 	Session 24: Where Do We Go from Here? - Tawanna Dillahunt, Mary Gray  We have covered a range of topics and (hopefully) raised more questions than answers while reflecting on the role of professional ethics in tech (and in our lives as technologists). The aim of this last session is to see the range of constructive interventions available to us, particularly as actors located in a range of positions across a powerful professional landscape. How might we see each other as allies and accomplices in stewarding 'ethical tech?' How might we best hold each other accountable for the power dynamics that make		No assigned materials but prepare to discuss your 'alt-syllabus' highlights with each other. You'll be asked to reflect on connections that you see between your alt-syllabus, and two sessions that you feel had the greatest impact on you.
